Key principles for delivering EIP in the context of COVID 19

Individuals with psychosis are some of the most vulnerable members of society. A concerted effort should be made to ensure that individuals, their families and carers receive the care and support they need to support recovery, prevent relapse and lead fulfilling lives

It is vital that critical core community service are maintained during the pandemic and any changes made to service configurations are reviewed regularly with the view to restoring to full service provision at the earliest possible opportunity

Where it is not possible to provide face to face interventions safely, EIP teams should provide interventions and support digitally

Individuals with psychosis are some of the most vulnerable members of society, and a concerted effort should be made to provide safe and appropriate care in the context of covid-19

Key principles: EIP delivery in the context of COVID-19

1

A concerted effort should be made to ensure that individuals, their families and carers receive the care and support they need to support recovery, prevent relapse and lead fulfilling lives

2

It is vital that critical core community service are maintained during the pandemic and any changes made to service configurations are reviewed regularly with the view to restoring to full service provision at the earliest possible opportunity

3

Where it is not possible to provide face to face interventions safely, EIP teams should provide interventions and support digitally

4

People with psychosis have key physical health needs that must be met during this time and we must not lose sight of the initial progress that has been made to address health inequalities.
